Another Lot of Appointments.

Which Report Says Displease Conkling.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 23.—In expectation of a show of strength between the Republicans and Democrats over the proposed reorganization of the officers of the Senate, a very large audience was attracted to the Senate Chamber to-day. Mr. Voorhees again brought forward the resolution condemning the course of the national banks in reference to the recent Funding bill, and Mr. Morrill interposed a point of order. Mr. Voorhees then took the floor and spoke at some length in regard to the right of the Senate to transact legislative business at special sessions, citing many precedents in support of this claim. The debate over the point of order will probably continue during most of the day.

The story is circulated that Senators Vest and Voorhees propose to attack Mahone in the Senate, and the Republican Senators for forming a coalition with him. Mahone expresses a willingness to meet these Democrats, and discuss principles and motives if they desire.

The President astonished the politicians to-day by his nominations. He nominated General E. A. Merritt to be Consul General at London, in place of General Adam Badeau, who is transferred to Denmark as Charge d'Affaires. Judge William H. Robertson, an anti-Conkling man, is nominated Collector of New York in place of Merritt. William Walter Phelps, of New Jersey, is nominated as United States Minister to Austria, to succeed Mr. Kasson, who comes home to take his seat in the House. W. E. Chandler is nominated as Solicitor General in place of Samuel Phillips, who is appointed to the vacant Judgeship in the Court of Claims. Ex-Representative Sheldon, of Louisiana, is nominated as Governor of New Mexico. Thomas M. Nichol, of Wisconsin, is nominated Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

WASHINGTON, March 23.—The nomination of Mr. Robertson, who led the fight against Grant and Conkling in New York last fall, for collector of the port of New York, creates surprise and considerable comment. The other nominations to day like Chandler, Merritt and Phelps, had the effect of removing the feeling among some Republicans that the President was yielding to the stalwarts. The collector of New York has a large patronage, and can wield immense political power—more than any other government official in the state. Conkling, it is said, greatly preferred not to have this power in the hands of a man who opposed him so strongly as Robertson, but it is not believed that Conkling will oppose his confirmation, as that would endanger the confirmation of Conkling's friends who have been nominated for places in New York. The action of the President in dividing the patronage between both factions is regarded as a desire to harmonize the party in New York. Merritt, the present collector, whom Conkling fought so hard several years ago, goes as consul general to London.

The batch of nominations which came from the White House to day has caused a sensation. Their discussion temporarily swallows up everything else, even the question of an extra session has become to day a minor topic. If anything more was needed to indicate the feeling which underlies the calm exterior of the Republican household it is furnished in the comments which followed to-day's nominations. Their receipt in the senate was characterized by a general expression of exuberance in one quarter and a corresponding expression of disgust in another. The latter had Messrs. Conkling, Cameron and Logan for a nucleus, around which gathered the stalwart element of the senate. When Vice-President Arthur opened the list of nominations, his eye first upon the name of Robertson for collector at New York. He turned the paper down so as to leave that name uppermost and sent it to Senator Conkling. The latter upon glancing at it, walked rapidly over to Senator Platt, showed it to him and they held a whispered conference. After the senate adjourned it was learned that Messrs. Conkling and Platt and the Vice-President were very much displeased with the nomination—in fact, indignant. They were not very careful as to comments. It is asserted by knowing ones that steps were begun then and there to have Robertson withdrawn. In the event of non-success, then it is proposed to kill him, if possible. As neither is likely to succeed, it is believed trouble is ahead. The Conkling people are considerably upset by Robertson, and conservative ones are of the opinion that the sending in of his name was injudicious. So far as the nominations now made are concerned, they admit that no unjust discrimination has been made, but it is believed that the President might have deferred in this case to the Senators from New York without damage to his administration and to the harmony of his party in the Senate and out. It is whispered loud enough for anybody to hear that the effect upon Conkling is to turn him from his advocacy of an extra session to active hostility.

NEW YORK, March 23.—At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the World's Fair to day the following letter was read:

NEW YORK CITY, March 22.—GENTLEMEN: I have the honor very respectfully to tender my resignation as President of the World's Fair Commission of 1893. I am satisfied that to make the enterprise a success will require the undivided time of whoever may hold the position of President. It will be impossible for me to devote any time to the duties of the office for a number of months to come, and I expect to be so engaged as to make it inconvenient to devote much time even at a later date. Hoping your enterprise may meet with the greatest success, I am very truly yours, F. S. GRANT.

Resolutions were adopted accepting the resignation "only" because other engagements of Gen. Grant will not permit him to devote his undivided time to the responsible and laborious duties of the Presidency, and wishing "our illustrious countryman" length of days and that fullness of honor and happiness so well merited by his devotion to our common country.

The Executive Committee unanimously named Hugh J. Jewett for President of the Commission.

A Times reporter had an interview with Mr. Jewett, and in reply to the question of acceptance of the Presidency, Mr. Jewett answered: "I see no reason to change the opinion expressed on the subject at Chickering Hall in January, 1890." Mr. Jewett, at that meeting, presided, and said because of the interest he felt in the enterprise it afforded him pleasure to discharge any duty in connection with it which the committee imposed, and to contribute in any degree possible to its success. He closed his speech by expressing the hope the Fair would be the grandest and most successful the world has ever seen.

PRIMARIES to-night.

REMEMBER that delegates to the township convention are to be chosen in the several election districts at 7:30 o'clock this evening.

THE township election this year is more important than usual, and Republicans should take a hand in nominating the men who are to fill the offices.

THE editor of the New York Commercial-Advertiser appreciates high art, and will doubtless be present at the grand concert at the close of the "beautiful snow" season. He thus notices the preparation: "There are to be forty Thomas concertos to the exhibition building in Chicago, and the leading performers are nightly practicing on the back fences of the Garden City."

THERE are but 1,366 newspapers and 1,097 magazines and quarterly reviews in all Great Britain. How does that compare with the 9,500 in America?

MR. ASHMEAD BARTLETT, whose marriage has been so frequently announced lately, has sent to his old friends in Philadelphia, and elsewhere in this country, large pieces of wedding cake. They came neatly done up in tin foil and blue paper, and inscribed: "With the compliments of the Baroness Bartlett Counts and Mr. Bartlett-Counts Bartlett." Each package was enclosed in a substantial wooden box bearing the address card of the famous London pastry cook, Gunter, of Berkeley Square.

OUT in Leadville when one is introduced to a stranger the polite thing is, "What was your name before you came here?" The next question, according to the rules of etiquette, is, "How did you manage to escape?"

A FRIEND of Senator Mahone is reported to have explained Mahone's position to a Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial as follows: "Mahone's object was partly to divide the white vote and break the back of the Bourbon control. Senator Hill was the fittest man in the senate to represent the Bourbon spirit, and his course the other day exemplified the course of the party in Virginia. They have always tried to whip him. His friend denied that there had been any bargain at the White House or with any body for the patronage, but he had already demonstrated that he deserved proper recognition of the party with whom he cast his vote, and there was no doubt that this would be accorded to him, and not for the sole reason that he held the balance of power. All the senators were entitled to be consulted by the administration and their fellow senators. The matter of patronage was as important an adjunct of Mahone's success as of any other man in the senate who was engaged in a head to head struggle with bitter enemies. In Virginia he had demonstrated to the Bourbon leaders that he had some power and force in leadership."

While Mahone is a skillful politician, he is too upright a man to ask anything that is unreasonable, or that would not be cheerfully conceded to him by any party. Since coming to Washington he had the most liberal offers from the Democratic side of the senate that any man could ask for. He had, however, chosen his own ground, and time would demonstrate that his course was wise, patriotic and honest, and above all, would be entirely satisfactory to his constituents."
